- Liquids & Gels: Medications in liquid, cream, or gel form are exempt from the standard 3-1-1 rules. You do not need to pack them in a plastic bag, but you must inform the security officer (TSA) about them.
- Screening Process: All medication (solid or liquid) will be screened. You may be asked to open the container, and liquids might undergo additional screening.
- Documentation: While not strictly required for all medications, keeping them in their original packaging with the prescription label is highly recommended. For international travel, bring a doctor's letter.
- Accessories: Items like ice packs, syringes, IV bags, and pumps are allowed, but they must be declared.
- International Travel: Check the regulations of your destination country, as some countries prohibit or restrict certain over-the-counter or prescription painkillers.
- Security Aid: You can use the TSA Cares helpline for questions and ask for a TSA notification card to inform officers about medical conditions.
